CONGRESS IN 1857

Minister to Greece at 28-Editor and Duelist-Figured in Beecher Case.

Roger Atkinson Pryor, perhaps the last surviving Brigadier-General in the Confederate Army and once a Justice of that is, the New York State Supreme Court. died last night in his home, 8 West Sixty-ninth street, at the age of 90 years. He had been ill several weeks. A week ago pneumonia set in, which caused his death.

caused his death.

It is given to few men to crowd so many varied incidents into life as did Judge Pryor, even into a long life such as his. A foreign Minister and a member of Congress before the civil war, a Brigdler-General during the fighting, a penniless emigrant to New York when war closed, a newspaper man, law-Supreme Court Justice and, finally, many years for retrospection, truly the late jurist was permitted to see—as he himself one put—the good and the bad

Judge Pryor was born in Dinwiddie, Va., July 18, 1828. At the age of 17 he was graduated from Hampton-Sidney College and three years later from the University of Virginia. When he at-tained his majority he was admitted to plaining: the bar in his native State. But his fore the conflict he was an editor in Washington and Richmond. Journalism gave him a chance to enter politics. He was a delegate to the convention that nominated Franklin Pierce for the Presi-dency and Pierce made Pryor, then 28. Minister to Greece. Later, in 1857, he went to Congress from the Roanoke dis-trict, which many years before had been represented by John Randolph.

It was while he was editor of the Washington Union and the Richmond Enquirer, newspapers which were almost rabid in the cause of slavery, that he ran foul of Oswald B. Finney, a Whig member of the Virginia Legislature, and the only possible outcome, according to the then current Virginian code of honor, was to fight a duel. Finney was so was to fight a due. Finney was so badly wounded that for a time it was thought he would die, but he recovered and reached the age of $1 years.

"They were indiscretions of my youth," said Judge Pryor a few years ago, speaking of personal conflicts. "Let's not talk about them." A Civil War Incident. .

There are some persons who say Judge Pryor had much to do with precipitating the civil war. In April, 1861, he was in Charleston. He told a Southern audience ripe for secession, of the fils the South suffered, which drew from Jefferson Davis the order to fire on Sumter. To Pryor was given the lan-yard of the first gun, with instructions to fire. But Virginia, his own State, was still in the union and he refused.

At Buil Run he commanded a Con-federate brigade and later he was cap-tured as a spy. Secretary of War Stan-ton was bent on hanging him, Judge vor traed to say years afterward, and

It must have taken Judge Pryor a good while to come to that point of view. When he resigned as Brisadler-General at the close of the conflict he hadn't a penny in the world. Mrs. Pryor sold her jewels for the price of tickets to New York. Here he caught up his knowledge of the law, added to it day by day and became a leader in the profession. Many important cases came to him in his practise. In 1875 he was one of the attorneys for Theodore Tilton in the celebrated suit for $100.000 against Henry Ward Beecher, who was accured of alienating the affections of Mrs. Tilton. In this contest of wits he was arrayed He leaves a widow, a brother and four sisters.

The late Gen. Daniel E. Sickles was a member with Judge Pryor of the Thirty-sixth Congress, which was in existence when the Southern States seceded. After David B. Hill became Governor of New York, Judge Pryor received a note from Stakes asking him to meet Gov. Hill became Green hight to the press room. Then he was transferred to the circulation department.
